Some of the questions that will be answered include: Why does your mule rush up or down slopes and hills? Does your mule do more sight-seeing than you on the trails? Is your mule more worried about what the other equines are doing than what you want from him? How to approach and meet and negotiate obstacles, gates, and other animals/people? ## The Halter: Key to Mule and Donkey Foundation Training

*See how ground manners are a hugely important first step in a relationship with your mule. If you are having difficulty communicating with him so that he is crowding you, won't lead, has no back up, or hauls you around the yard, that needs to be fixed before you ever consider getting on his back. Steve will introduce you to the come-a-long hitch and the uses for a rope halter. As he demonstrates the proper fitting and adjustment for a rope halter, Steve will also help you understand how mules and donkeys think and give you the steps to help your animal learn solid ground communication. If your mule or donkey is rude and pushy on the ground, he will be rude and pushy when you are in the saddle. The bulk of the "work" can be done without being in the saddle. Join in this clinic for plenty of good pointers on keeping your mule or donkey focused on you and what you want him to do. 2 participants/mules

If you want to outfit your mule for the job so that he is able and ready to perform, this is the clinic for you.*

You may also get to see how a mule's problem behaviors can be directly linked to ill-fitting tack. So if you are wanting to hear about behavior problems, you may also want to listen in on this program
